Gunnersaurus salary amount

By Stephen Large/Football3 months ago Comments Arsenal midfielder Mesut Ozil has withdrawn his offer to pay Gunnersaurus' salary after it emerged that the popular mascot was earning £350k-per-week. On Monday, it was revealed that Gunnersaurus had been sacked after 27 years at the club. Tyrannosaurus rex was one of 55 redundancies announced by the club due to the financial implications of Pierre-Emerick Aubameyang's new contract. Upon hearing the news, German international Ozil announced that he would refund Arsenal his full salary if they retained his services. However, the 31-year-old former Real Madrid star changed his mind when he learned that the carnivorous mascot earned the same as him. Addressing the refund on Twitter, Ozil said: 'When I made a very public announcement to cover the Gunners' salary, I thought it would be on the minimum wage or something. He can get to the fk if he thinks I'm giving him all the money I get to sit in the stands under an umbrella. The World Cup winner also had an answer to questions about his involvement: I would like to take this opportunity to assure nightclub owners around the world that I am still 100% committed to running a playboy lifestyle. Meanwhile, Gunnersaurus expressed his disappointment at Ozil's decision: I was in the living room choosing a new Bentley when I got the message. How did it happen that made me redundant, but stop it? At least Arsenal fans see me on the pitch every week. However, there was some good news for the 8-foot reptile, who revealed that he will star in the latest installment of the Jurassic Park series. Jurassic World: The Search for More Money is set to hit theaters in June 2022, and the main antagonist of the story is Gunnersaurus. Discussing her big-screen debut with IMDB, the mascot told us: 'I hope to follow in the footsteps of other footballers who have turned away from acting, such as Eric Cantona, Vinnie Jones and Ashley Young. On Jones, Gunnersaurus said, It's Hard to believe Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels was released in 1998. I mean, there's probably a whole generation of football fans who think that Vinnie Jones is just a sh*t actor. I was so sad that Jerry Quy, our famous and loyal Mascot of Gunnersaurus and an integral part of our club, was fired after 27 years, wrote the 31-year-old German in a Twitter post. Therefore, I propose to return arsenal to the full salary of our big green guy, as long as I am an Arsenal player, so that Jerry can continue his work, which he loves so much. Arsenal said they must lay off staff due to the financial impact of the coronavirus pandemic. The Gunners' first-team players and coach Mikel Arteta agreed a 12.5% pay cut in April. The club's board also agreed to give up more than a third of its salaries over the next 12 months. Arsenal signed Thomas Partey for £45million from Atletico Madrid on Monday's transfer deadline. Former Germany international Ozil has been with the Gunners since 2013 and his contract expires at the end of the season. He is paid a reported £350,000 a week, although he has not played so far in 2020-21.As as a result of the pandemic, no fan has been able to attend a Premier League match since March. YOUR CHOICES Gunnersaurus has been offered a lifeline by an unlikely source at Arsenal. The Gunners controversially decided to make the legendary mascot superfluous as a cost-cutting measure. Gunnersaurus was fired after 27 years the Great Green Dinosaur has been a fixture in home games since 1993, but was fired because the role is no longer needed. Jerry Quy, who played the role of Gunnersaurus, is hugely popular at Arsenal, who was also involved in the Junior Gunners and Travel Club. Fans even set up a GoFundMe page to save him from extinction. Players in and the present also expressed their surprise at the decision to let go of him, including Paul Merson and Ian Wright. Gunnersaurus has been a hugely popular figure at Arsenal since 1993, and Mesut Ozil decided to do something about it, albeit sensationally sensationally until the end of his stay at Arsenal. Ozil wrote on social media: 'I was so sad that Jerry Quy aka our famous & loyal mascot @Gunnersaurus and an integral part of our club has been fired after 27 years. AFTV's Robbie Lyle praised Ozil's gesture and criticised the club for criticising the mascot in the first place. He told talkSPORT 2: 'The whole Gunnersaurus thing that came out yesterday I think was a bit mischievous by some of the documents because I know the guy who did the Gunnersaurus stuff and worked at the club for years. The bigger problem is that he lost his job. Mesut Ozil did it and it's good PR for him of course. Mikel Arteta better coach than Lampard. Solskjaer and Mourinho It's a nice gesture. I know this guy and he's Arsenal through and through. He has been at the club for years. He was a great servant of the club. I am very sad that they allow people to go like this. I understand that maybe we'll slow you down for a while until things get up. I just don't understand getting rid of someone who was so loyal to the club. It's a bit of a shame. In response to the redundancy, an Arsenal spokesman told ESPN's James Oiley: 'The Gunners have not go extinct and will return to action when fans are allowed back in matches. liveLatest UpdatesMaps and CasesVaccine InformationA Q TimelineContinue reading the main storiesMesut Ozil, one of football's highest paid stars, has offered to save the club's beloved dinosaur mascot, who has been delighting fans and players for 27 years. I was so sad that Jerry Quy aka our famous & loyal mascot @Gunnersaurus and an integral part of our club has been fired after 27 years. Ozil, a midfielder, wrote on Twitter on Tuesday. Therefore, I offer a refund @Arsenal full salary of our big green guy, as long as I am an Arsenal player. The response from Arsenal supporters was overwhelmingly positive, as measured by the more than 11,000 comments that fans have posted to Ozil's offer since Tuesday afternoon. One man who recently had a band of beloved green mascots tattooed on his shoulder seemed particularly relieved. The fate of Jerry Quy and his alter ego, Gunnersaurus, has been in limbo since Monday, when reports emerged that the club was letting Quy go as part of a cost-cutting effort that has already led to the elimination of 55 jobs. Quy has been mugging Arsenal fans as Gunnersaurus since the character was introduced 27 years ago, in addition to serving the team in other functions, according to The Athletic, which announced the team's plans to dismiss Quy.ImageMesut Ozil in January. Eddie Keogh/Reuters Far away has slammed many fans as particularly outrageous because on the same day the club spent £45 million, or more than $58 million, to sign Thomas Partey, the midfielder. The estimated net worth of the team's owner, Stan Kroenke, hovers above $8.3 billion. Gunnersaurus, whose full name is Gunnersaurus Rex, was introduced to fans on August 20, 1993, according to ESPN. Soft and constantly smiling, he proved irredible to both fans and players. In 2019, he won the Mascot Football World Cup, a semi-formal honor given to him by a popular Twitter account. An Arsenal spokesman declined to say whether the team would accept Ozil's offer, stating that the team would not comment on personnel matters. Gunners have not go extinct and will return to action when fans can return to matches, a spokesman said on Tuesday. The surge of love for Ozil over his bid to rescue gunnersaurus comes amid the midfielder's own difficulties with the team. Ozil, the talented playmaker who won the World Cup with Germany in 2014, is Arsenal's highest-paid player, pulling in about $453,000 a week. However, since the Premier League resumed in June, after a two-month break caused by the coronavirus, he has not played once. His reluctance to accept a pay cut, as many of his team-mates and coaches have done to help make up for arsenal's pandemic losses, has also made him unpopular with some fans. Fans.
